Embassy Rome reports that their RSO favors the option of using trains for travel from Rome to Bologna. Apparently they say that the trains are more reliable and safe than flying domestically. The train schedule would provide much more flexibility to the Administrator if this would work for EPA Security. The U.S. Ambassador to Italy generally travels by train rather than airplane when feasible. The RSO would be happy to talk this over with you. The Administrator's ability to participate in a program that is very important to the Italians depends on whether he would be able to travel by train or not, but we understand that you have to make a judgement from a security perspective.
